A Serious Charge.

FOUR MEN ARRESTED CHARGED WITH MURDER AND BURNING THE MILL OF S. H. LONAS.

On last Friday, Sheriff Spiker assisted by Deputies Klee, Dodson, and Hepner, arrested West W. Craig, about 56 years of age, and son Warren T. Craig, and Jno. R. Lyntheben, aged 67 years and son Solon charged with murdering Bruce Lonas and burning the mill of S. H. Lonas.

On the night of Dec. 18th last, about 11 o'clock the rail belonging to Mr. Samuel H. Lonas was discovered to be on fire. At that time, the fire had gained such headway that the mill could not be entered. Bruce, the twenty year old son of Mr. S. H. Lonas usually slept in the mill. Among the ashes were afterwards found a part of the remains of the young man. The fact that these remains were found in a part of the mill from which he could have readily escaped, and not in that part in which his bed was situated at once aroused the suspicion of foul play. The remains of a dog that had been in the mill with Mr. Lonas were found in the fire box of the engine.

From the evidence before the Justice, it seems that a party of six men were in the mill that night for the purpose of robbing; that young Lonas in defending his father's property fought the robbers; that two of them were wounded, and that sacks that had been taken from the mill were afterwards burned at the home of one of the prisoners. The prisoners were committed to jail, at Woodstock, to answer an indictment. The prisoners live in a mountainous section of the county and have an unenviable record.

It is rumored that a pedler was some time ago killed in the same section, and that his body was twice removed from hiding places.

The Fourth of July.

The Fourth of July is a good thing. We can well remember how patriotic we used to become every Fourth of July. That was before "the late unpleasantness." The day was associated in our mind with an abundance of lemonade and "My Country 'tis of thee."

Last Monday morning the Committee of the town or working brigade as it seemed to be, were endeavoring to make a "thing of beauty" out of our public square. They sawed off all the dead limbs that disfigured the beautiful shade trees, on either side of the boulevard, drew their plans on the court house pavement, and began the erection of an arch, under which the visiting firemen are expected to march. That was just the beginning of the good work. The street cleaning brigade were expected to follow. What a job those poor fellows have! After them will come the decorating committees, who will advertise to the world our loyalty by an abundant display of the red, white and blue. Those colors are all right. They are the chosen emblems of our country, but to be honest with the public, there is a little corner in our hearts that they do not reach. They do not thrill the soul and stir the emotions as does either of those old tattered, bullet penetrated banners that are now "forever furled." The men that received their baptism of fire under the white and red, can be truly loyal; they can fight for the country that knows no North, no South, no East, no West, but claims the whole world, including the thousand and one little islands that are scarcely large enough for a watermelon patch; they can forgive, but they cannot forget, and are really as much devoted to the colors that they so proudly carried at Manassas and Fredericksburg and Cold Harbor and other places, as they were when they were prolonging their lives by eating green corn and short rations.

Those colors then made an impression upon their hearts as deep as that made by the island of Calais upon the heart of England's queen. They are out of sight, but never out of mind. They are like the dust of the dear departed, a thing to be remembered and cherished, but not displayed before the unthinking crowds. They are no longer waved in triumphant processions. They are silently stored away with our most precious mementoes. The principles which they represented are no longer opposed, even by our former enemies, but today the most thoughtful recognize them as the foundation stone of this government. The Union is stronger today by the recognition of the grand principles for which they fought; and among those who lead our armies to success, and are today quick to recognize the supremacy of the stars and stripes are the men who gallantly fought under the white and red.

Woodstock expects to put on her holiday attire and welcome all that come. In this issue, we publish the program of the day. All are invited. All will be welcomed.

DEATH OF REV. SOCRATES HENKEL.

Rev. Socrates Henkel, D. D. died at his home in New Market, on Thursday, June 20th, in the 79th year of his age. He was paralyzed five years ago and had been in declining health ever since. He was buried from Emanuel Lutheran Church, in New Market, on last Saturday. Rev. E. H. Kohn, assisted by Rev. Dr. Bushnell, officiated.

Dr. Henkel was a distinguished minister of his church. He was born in North Carolina in 1823. He became Pastor of the Church in New Market in 1850 and for a number of years served not only that congregation, but several others in the county.

After the war, Dr. Henkel and Judge Geo. R. Calvert founded the Shenandoah Valley, a newspaper which is now conducted by his sons, Ambrose and Elton Henkel. He also conducted Our Church Paper, a religious journal which enjoys a large circulation among the members of the Lutheran church.

He was an active worker in his church, the growth of which is due in no small degree to his continuous labor.

LETTER FROM ABBEVILLE, S. C.

MR. EDITOR:

Another letter from Abbeville if you have room for it in your paper. I hope it will not be full of errors as that of a correspondent of an Ohio paper, copied in the HERALD of a few weeks ago. We may find excuse for his mistakes in the carriage that was "cycling." A man who rides a bicycle can take but a glance at anything around him or he might be sorry he didn't keep his eye on the track.

Abbeville has been represented in every war of the U. S. from the times of the Revolution to the war with Spain. In the war between the states five colonels from the town were killed. Quite a large proportion of the town of more than 1200 inhabitants.

The bar of Abbeville has furnished three judges to the supreme court of South Carolina, and four circuit court judges. The present circuit judge is a citizen of Abbeville. One foremost man in the House of Representatives from this state was a member of this bar, and here he celebrated John C. Calhoun his career, and engaged in the practice of law. Here the secessionist movement had its birth, and Abbeville was the last capital of the Southern Confederacy. In a beautiful grove at the edge of town, rising ground now called Secession Hill—there was held a great meeting immediately after the election of Mr. Lincoln. Many speeches were made, and with the exception of one it was resolved that the time had come when South Carolina should resume her sovereign rights.

A few hundred yards from where I am writing stands an old fashioned house in the centre of a beautiful lawn. From the street on one side there leads an avenue of magnificent oaks. This front looks toward the west. The south end of the front is a carriage way that winds between pretty hedges, and beneath the rich looking magnolia trees, whose dark green glistening foliage is at this season of the year relieved by the brilliant green of the cypress. In this house (according to Mr. Reagan of Texas) Mr. Jefferson Davis and his cabinet met for the last time. When it adjourned each member sought safety in his own country dictated in the exigency of the time.

Mr. Davis was captured a few days afterward in Georgia.

Abbeville has grown from a town of 1200 inhabitants to one of at least 5000 since 1890. There is a large cotton factory here, a cotton gin and compress machinery, and a cotton seed oil factory. Railroad shops are located here, and the office of the Atlanta branch of the seaboard Air Line. There are two banks and a fine school building. There are six churches for the white people; two Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Catholic and Episcopal. I have never undertaken to count the negro churches. The largest one is Presbyterian (Northern), the smallest one, not far from the largest, shelters the believers in fire baptism, whatever that may be.

There is a negro college not far from where I am writing. Their commencement occurred a week ago. For several weeks before the exercises I could hear the pupils making preparation. I didn't attend. The weather was too warm. I do not believe that a strictly literary and musical education is best for the negro.

There is another college for negroes just outside of town. It is well attended. Both these schools are under Northern Presbyterian influence. The money to build, equip and run them came from Philadelphia.

Abbeville is about half way between the Sata and Savannah rivers. It is a healthy place and remarkably free from fevers of every sort. It is reported that an epidemic of cholera is better and larger than it ever has been in Abbeville county. Cotton you know is the chief crop. The purchase of a binder by a farmer is noticed in paper as if it were the coming of a new railroad. And that reminds me that I forgot to mention that Abbeville has 100 R. R.'s, the Board Air Line and the Southern. I have been told that the owners of the land are leaving and removing to towns and renting their lands to croppers chiefly negroes. The soil is a mixed clay and sand and is kept from washing by a system of terraces, which was the invention of John C. Calhoun. The terraces have done much for the preservation of the farms. So he was somewhat of a farmer as well as a statesman.

These farms are left standing from year to year by used farmers, and grow up with weeds and give the fields an unkempt appearance. The absence of fences give the plantations a deserted seeming. I often think I would like to see some of the lands here come under the management of a first-rate Valley farmer. There are no county courts in this state but any Saturday there will be a meeting of the C. L. Square in Abbeville that you will see in Woodstock in ten years. For the most part the negroes are well clothed and their mules well kept.

No Right to Ungliness.

The woman who is lovely in face, form, and temper will always have friends, but one who would be attractive must keep her health. If she is weak, sickly and all run down, she will be nervous and irritable. If she has constipation or kidney trouble, her impure blood will cause pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. Electric Bitter is the best medicine in the world to regulate stomach, liver and kidneys and to purify the blood. It gives strong nerves, bright eyes, smooth, velvety skin, rich complexion. It will make a good looking, charming woman of a run-down invalid. Only 50c cents at B. Schmitt's Drug Store.

Base Ball.

The match game of base ball at the Edinburg last Wednesday, between the Woodstock and Edinburg teams resulted in a score of 7 to 9 in favor of Edinburg.
